

CHANGE IS USUALLY BOTH LOGICAL AND EMOTIONAL

Most workplace changes have a business reason behind them: new systems, new leadership, new processes, restructuring, growth, cost control, customer needs, or competitive pressure.

THE LOGICAL SIDE

The business case for change.

Improve efficiency

Reduce costs

Drive growth

Meet customer needs

Stay competitive

Build for the future

THE EMOTIONAL SIDE

The personal experience of change.

"How does this affect my job?"

"Will I still be successful?"

"Do I have the skills to keep up?"

"What am I losing?"

"Who do I go to for answers?"

"Is this really going to stick?"

A KEY CONCEPT

People do not resist change only because they are negative. They often resist because they are uncertain.

Lead with clarity.
Explain the why.

Lead with empathy.
Acknowledge the human impact.

Listen actively.
Make space for real conversations.

Support the transition.
Build confidence.

Connect the logical and the emotional.
That's how change sticks.
