

CHANGE OFTEN FEELS LIKE LOSS BEFORE IT FEELS LIKE PROGRESS

Even good changes can feel uncomfortable because something familiar is being replaced.

EMPLOYEES MAY LOSE:

A routine

A trusted process

A sense of competence

A relationship with a former manager or team

A role they understood clearly

Confidence in how to perform well

That does not mean the change is bad. It means employees need time to adjust.

A HELPFUL PHRASE:

“Change is not just learning something new. It is also letting go of something familiar.”

HOW LEADERS CAN HELP

Acknowledge the loss.

Name it. Normalize it.
Validate it.

Communicate with empathy.

Explain the why and the what's next.

Be patient.

Adjustment takes time. Give it.

Provide clarity and support.

Help employees feel prepared, not surprised.

Reinforce the opportunity.

Connect today's change to tomorrow's success.
